Written in the late 4th century AD, the Confessions is an autobiographical work that chronicles Augustine's journey from a life of sin to his conversion to Christianity. The text is one of the earliest examples of Western autobiographical literature and reflects the spiritual and philosophical struggles of the time.

Augustine lived during a period of significant religious transformation, marked by the decline of the Roman Empire and the rise of Christianity as a dominant faith. Book 1 specifically deals with Augustine's infancy and early childhood, providing insights into his early life experiences and the cultural milieu that shaped his worldview. This section of the Confessions sets the stage for the subsequent books, which delve deeper into his intellectual and spiritual development.

Authorship and Historical Setting

Saint Augustine of Hippo, the author, was a Roman African, theologian, and philosopher. His writings significantly influenced Christian doctrine and Western thought. The Confessions was composed around 397-400 AD, during a time when Augustine was a bishop and an established figure in the Church. The context of the late Roman Empire, with its political instability and religious debates, provides a critical backdrop for the themes explored in the Confessions.
